CONSULTATION QUESTIONS

Outcomes

Section 2 of the delivery plan sets out four outcomes the Scottish Government and its partners are working towards. The outcomes are:

- 1. Equal and inclusive access to the physical and cultural environment, transport and suitable, affordable housing.
- 2. Equal and inclusive access to healthcare provision and support for independent living, with control over the best use of resources, including support for disabled children.
- 3. Equal and inclusive access to education, paid employment and an appropriate income and support whether in or out of work.
- 4. Equal and inclusive access to the justice system without fear of being unfairly judged or punished, and with protection of personal and private rights.

Q1:	Do you agree or disagree that together these four outcomes cover the key a	reas of life the Scottish Government and its partners must focus on to achie	ve the rights of disabled people?

Agree x□	Disagree □	Neither agree nor disagree □

Q2: Please comment here on your response above, or if you have any other comments on the outcomes

The National Deaf Children's Society agree that the four outcomes that are mentioned are all key areas of life that should be focused on by the Scottish Government to fully realise the rights of disabled people.

We also believe there are two omissions which should be addressed within the plan and should therefore be contained within its outcomes:

1) The early years is a key omission within the document. The early years has been identified as a priority area by the Scottish Government and the work of the Early Years Collaborative and other initiatives has evidenced the positive impact that can be achieved when a child receives the support they need at this time in their life. It has also evidenced the benefit of targeting resources into supporting children more effectively at this time in order to reduce the risk of factors that undermine their wellbeing being missed and this having a lasting impact on their life chances and ability to succeed and achieve potential. For disabled children and young people who require targeted access of disabled children and young people is vital and should be addressed within the document. Supporting our communities ensure that disabled, young people and adults can live as equal citizens, living in communities which value diversity and are free from stigma and discrimination. 1.	Transport accessibility

2.	Design for Ageing
3.	Raising awareness of accessible design
4.	Homes which are more accessible
5.	Accessible housing	Under building standards we recommend that a further commitment is included to review and strengthen the current Scottish Government guidance for all public buildings for disabled adults and children in relation to acoustics performance. In schools, good acoustic environments support the learning of all children, not just those who are disabled or who have a additional communication requirement. Schools that create sound learning environments have a crucial role to play in helping close the education attainment gap. Research has found that poor classroom acoustics negatively affects numeracy skills, literacy skills, attention and memory among pupils. For deaf children, this is particularly important given the limited nature of hearing technologies to provide a child with access to sound beyond three metres even in good listening conditions. Making appropriate adjustments at the earliest stage of a school build is critical to ensure sound acoustic environments and prevent more costly and disruptive adaptations from being required later on. Current guidance in Scotland makes reference to the Buildings Bulletin 93, which is recognised as the most comprehensive single source of guidance on acoustics in the UK. However, unlike other parts of the UK, the Bulletin is not statutory in

One specific example running in Scotland is the NDCS Deaf Friendly Swimming Project which supports swimming teachers and coaches to ensure deaf young people are fully included in swimming activities. Teachers and coaches learn simple changes that make activities deaffriendly and more inclusive. The project also supports teachers and coaches to develop confidence in communicating with deaf children and young people. NDCS recommends the Scottish Government reference a commitment to working with the third sector to roll out such initiatives

Commitment (Outcome 2)	Comment
17. Health Inequalities of people with learning	We agree that this is a worthwhile disabilities data collection	area of work, however we do not agree that this should be limited towards those with a learning disability. Improved data collection and sharing of information is critical to deliver more effective services for all disabled people.
	For example, there is currently no complete national data set on numbers of deaf children and young people in Scotland. While information collected through the Pupil Census has improved over the years, this only records information about school-age children and there are still gaps in this means of data collection. (For example, for children with mild hearing loss and those with no formal education plan in place).
	Without a basic understanding of the numbers of deaf children and their needs, it is difficult for national and local government to effectively plan service delivery.
	NAME
	While the advent of Universal Newborn Hearing Screening (UNHS) in Scotland since 2005 has allowed for earlier diagnosis of childhood deafness, the improvement of data collection and sharing has not necessarily followed. NDCS has been involved in two pilot Local Records of Deaf Children projects.

These projects have seen positive outcomes with regards to sharing basic information from UNHS with appropriate local agencies in order to plan services effectively. The recommendation from these pilot projects has been a national roll out in order to ensure public services are able to plan services effectively.

NDCS would welcome the opportunity to provide more information on these pilot projects.

18. Advocacy

As above, access to independent advocacy is critical for all disabled children, young people and adults, not just those who have a learning disability. NDCS recommends that this commitment is extended beyond its current remit to redress this.

The ability to access independent advocacy or impartial support and information is crucial to enable both parents/carers and children/young people to be empowered to have their voices heard and shape the decisions that affect their lives.

Separate and appropriate advocacy for children and young people is vital. It is unclear whether there is a role here for the proposed new information and advice service that Children in Scotland may deliver as a result of the passage of the Education (Scotland) Bill. Regardless, any service or individual assisting a disabled child or young person should be skilled in facilitating youth participation and ensuring the needs and voice of the child or young person is heard. This is particularly valid in the context of deaf children and young people, where many children require unique support to meet their communication needs.

26. Child Rights and Wellbeing Impact Assessment (CRWIA) for all policy development affecting children	It is positive that the framework for completing CRWIAs includes questions around disabled children and requires consideration of the impact of the policy on groups of children. We would welcome further information on how it will be assured that those completing CRWIAs have the appropriate skills and knowledge to take full account of the needs of disabled children in their assessments. Consultation and liaison with third sector organsiations, parents/carers and disabled children and young people themselves would be important here.
27. Fund for projects to support disabled children and their families28. Information Hub	We agree that an Information Hub will be a valuable resource for the parents and carers of disabled children and young people. With much information already being available online, establishing an Information Hub is an opportunity to look the key issues of how information is accessed and communicated to parents/carers and children/young people. It is a chance to be ambitious and creative in thinking of effective ways to reach parents in a way that is accessible to all. Many third sector organisations and projects such as for Scotland's Disabled Children Coalition's Parent Participation Project have information about what parents say they would like to see in their communities in terms of information provision and support. What parents/carers say they need should be the basis of the development of any Information Hub. It is important to fully understand what is available presently in terms of information and groups of organisations as often these groups can sign-post and support families of disabled children.

29. Transitions Test of Change Project	We agree that this will be a valuable project – there are a number of critical challenges for disabled young people in at the time of transitioning on from school. In particular, research NDCS commissioned from the University of Edinburgh found that although deaf young people are entitled to transitional planning through the Additional Support for Learning Act, very few who took part in the research recording having received this kind of planning. As such the challenge of supporting smooth transitions for disabled young people is about ensuring both children's and adult services are actively playing their role to promote positive post school outcomes for disabled young people.

Q8: Are there any additional commitments and/or ways that you would improve the outcome 2 commitments that you have not already mentioned in your answers above?

NDCS recommends that an additional commitment is included at number 31 which relates to establishing how well the needs of disabled children and young people are addressed within Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services.

Getting it right for every child means ensuring every child and young person has the supports they need to flourish physically and mentally. Ensuring the services that support young people are equipped to address their unique needs is critical. Many disabled children and young people are at increased risk of experiencing mental ill health, but for various reasons mainstream services may be inadequate to meet their unique needs.

Deafness itself does not cause mental health problems however the communication barriers and language delays that deaf children and young people may experience increases how likely they are to be affected by mental ill health. According to NHS statistics, 40% of deaf children and young people will experience mental ill health compared with 25% of hearing children (NHS, 2004). In addition, at the recent Deaf Learners Conference, bullying and social isolation was identified by deaf young people as one of their top challenges.

There is currently no specialist mental health service for deaf children in Scotland despite such services being well established in other parts of the UK. Access to mainstream health services has been found to be challenging for deaf children and young people and their families and the knowledge, skills and experience of staff there is unlikely to match that which a specialist service could offer.

By exploring how current Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services meet the needs of disabled children and young people, the Scottish Government can commit to building a mental health workforce with the right skills and expertise to meet every young person's needs, including those who are disabled.

NDCS are currently undertaking scoping work in relation to a Managed Clinical Network for children's hearing. This work may inform how we can drive up standards, support inter-agency working and deliver the best outcomes for disabled children. NDCS would be keen to share this work to inform future working.

Commitment (Outcome 3)	Comment
36. Continued commitment to implement additional support for learning	Comment The Additional Support for Learning Act is the fundamental legal framework for supporting the educational needs of disabled children and young people. We completely agree this should continue to be implemented. We believe that the Delivery Plan is an opportunity not only to report on what is already happening, but how current education initiatives can be enhanced and strengthened to better meet the needs of learners. Please refer to the comments box in this section for our further suggestions in this area.
37. Anti-Bullying –respectme and review and refresh of the 'National Approach to Anti-bullying for Scotland's Children and Young'	Agree that this is a key issue for many disabled people and connects to the social stigma that continues to be attached to disability. Bullying was highlighted as their top challenge at school by attendees at the Deaf learners Conference which was held in partnership between NDCS and Education Scotland in February 2015.
	Their experiences ranged from young people feeling excluded and being treated differently to pupils being directly targeted and made fun of because of their deafness. Experiences discussed by the pupils included:-

- "People being arrogant and unpleasant towards deafness"
- "Being singled out"
- "People in my class making fun of our sign language"
- "Getting bullied, making fun of me because of the way I spoke and that I am deaf. Because I struggled a lot in school they kept calling me names and all sorts."
- "Pupils making fun of deaf pupils – bad behaviour"

NDCS would welcome the opportunity to consult with Respectme in relation to the experiences of deaf young people.

More widely, bullying is connected to the social stigma that is attached to disabled people and permeates all aspects of their lives. Stigma and discrimination continues to exist which has an impact on life outcomes for disabled children and young people. This stigma is a fundamental barrier in promoting their equal access. Whether consciously acknowledged or not, stigma shapes how disabled people are viewed needs to be challenged boldly. Changing public attitudes and perceptions towards people with disabilities and ensuring communities are inclusive and supportive is key.

A nationally led public campaign to help stamp out the stigma which causes bullying, hate crime and other negative attitudes would be helpful commitment to make progress towards a fairer society for all in Scotland. The See Me campaign has been highly successful in achieving change. A campaign of similar dimensions to support changing attitudes is vital to ensuring we build the capacity of communities.

Q11: Are there any additional commitments and/or ways that you would strengthen the outcome 3 commitments that you have not already mentioned in your answers above?

- 1. Closing the educational attainment gap in Scotland is rightly a key priority for the Scotlish Government. The initiatives that are being taken forward to drive this forward also offer opportunities to achieve the aspiration of inclusive education for every learner, including those with additional support needs.
 - The National Improvement Framework is an ideal opportunity to embed the principles of inclusive communication and ensure accessibility is built in from the very beginning. By committing to the clear principle that the Framework will be fully inclusive to every learner the Scottish Government can ensure the Delivery Plan is in line with and supports these ambitions.
- 2. Staying on theme of attainment, NDCS has welcomed the Attainment Challenge Fund and we recognise that the though the focus of these funds has been around targeting those learners from the most deprived backgrounds, other learners who make up lowest attaining groups such as disabled learners will also benefit from the initiative. NDCS recommends that attainment advisors currently being recruited by Education Scotland have a remit to consider the impact of local attainment initiatives on disabled learners, and share effective practice where work has successfully targeted those children and young people.
- 3. As far as NDCS is aware the Scottish Qualifications Authority is the only exam board in the UK that does not offer language modification arrangements in exams and assessments for deaf pupils. In the absence of these arrangements, a commitment to inclusive communication for every learner in education settings is critical to ensure that no learner is left behind due to inaccessible educational materials and assessments.
- 4. There have been significant shifts in the specialist workforce who play a key role in implementing Additional Support for Learning. Recently this has become an increasing priority for the Educational Institute of Scotland who have recognised the impact on teachers and schools that struggle to meet the needs of disabled learners due to a lack of appropriate skills and expertise in this area. A workforce planning exercise around ASL may be a helpful way to determine the existing roles and provision, any gaps or challenges that exist and consider how to future-proof this important workforce.

Outcome 4 - Equal and inclusive access to the justice system without fear of being unfairly judged or punished, and with protection of personal and private rights

Q16: Please comment here on your response above, or if you have any further comments on the themes

In reality, meaningful disabled youth participation requires well trained practitioners who have a strong understanding and awareness of the needs of disabled children and young people. Appropriate training for staff to ensure they have the skills and knowledge will be key to achieving this theme. NDCS would welcome the opportunity to provide further information and resources on championing the meaningful participation of deaf children and young people in every area of their lives.

NDCS agrees that for disabled people to be able to participate fully they must feel safe. NDCS recommends strong awareness is referenced about the additional steps that may be required to keep disabled children and young people safe, particularly given that research illustrates that they are most vulnerable to abuse and harm.

There should also be a strong acknowledgement that keeping children and young people safe goes beyond child protection and should have a strong emphasis on emotional wellbeing and physical safety too so that children and young people can flourish in environments that support them to reach their full potential.

Q18: Are there any other comments you would like to make on the overall delivery plan, to inform its further development and implementation?

At the outset of our submission we highlighted that the Delivery Plan currently does not contain sufficient commitments to strengthen the experience and outcomes of disabled children in the early years, a critical time in their development and wellbeing.

- 1. The extension of early learning and childcare through the Children and Young People Act (Scotland) (2014) to three and four years and looked after two year olds is to be welcomed and will benefit many children and families. Making the additional extension to two year olds in receipt of Disability Living Allowance would have a significant impact on families with disabled children. It is widely evidenced that the cost of having a disabled child on parents/carers is substantial and supporting parents/carers with additional access to childcare will offer these families new options and flexibility and promote positive outcomes.
- 2. Ensuring that there are appropriate standards of support for disabled children in the early years is also critical. For example, despite the introduction of UNHS the Scottish Government has not published any guidance in terms of post-diagnostic and subsequent early years support and information which should be made available for these children and their families or carers. As such provision for this group in the early years varies across Scotland, with considerable implications for the longer term education and wellbeing outcomes of deaf children and young people. A commitment from the Scottish Government to consider the extent to which early years standards of support for disabled children currently exists and how it can be strengthened would be a valuable addition to the UNCRPD Delivery Plan.
