

Re. Transparent face masks approved for use by NHS Transparent Mask Panel

I hope this letter finds you well. As CEO of the National Deaf Children's Society, I wanted to share some good news with you around transparent face masks.

You may be aware that for deaf children young people and adults, patients and staff alike, opaque facemasks create a serious communication barrier. The increased use of facemasks during the pandemic, although necessary to reduce the spread of infection, has made lip-reading and understanding visual cues from facial expressions impossible. This has left deaf people (and I include myself here) struggling to communicate. The implications of misunderstanding medical information due to these new barriers could be very serious.

To address these issues, a UK wide working group was set up by NHS England and NHS Improvement to work on the development of transparent PPE, which the National Deaf Children's Society has been supporting. The group produced a new technical specification which gives testing, design and performance requirements for single-use transparent face masks which provide comparable protection to that of a Type IIR mask. The technical specification has been published here:

<https://www.gov.uk/government/publications/technical-specifications-for-personal-protective-equipment-ppe/transparent-face-mask-technical-specification>

Three products have now completed this process and are available for use in healthcare settings as an equivalent to the Type IIR mask. These masks are not yet on the NHS supply chain, but they are available for purchase and use by NHS Trusts immediately.

We would encourage you to purchase a supply of these masks so they are available for use with deaf patients and staff. Their use could be regarded as a reasonable adjustment under the Equality Act 2010 and we will be encouraging all our members to ask services to try them. Polly's experience below shows how clear face masks can make a huge difference.

'The use of clear face masks by all hospital staff when communicating with me was invaluable during a recent post-surgery recovery period. I was so tired after my operation that I didn't have the energy to struggling with the communication barrier caused by standard face masks. They didn't fog up and seemed easy to wear... I found my inpatient experience to be the easiest hospital experience from a deaf perspective that I've had in a long time, which is all down to these clear face masks. This is because they enabled me to lipread and communicate with everyone - from surgeons and anaesthetists to physiotherapists and psychologists - easily.'
